Worried about your memory?

Feeling forgetful or confused?

Finding out if there is a problem is the first step to getting help

Have you become concerned about increasing lapses in memory, or other changes in thinking or behaviour for yourself, a family member or friend?

Changes in memory and thinking have a number of possible causes that may include stress, depression, pain, chronic illness, medication or alcohol and sometimes it is a sign of early dementia. Major changes in memory are not normal at any age and should be taken seriously. If you or someone you know is experiencing these kinds of difficulties it is better to see your doctor sooner rather than later.

Talking to your doctor

There is no single specific test that can show whether someone has dementia. A diagnosis is made by talking to you and perhaps a relative or friend to find out more about your difficulties with memory and thinking. You will also need a physical and neurological examination which will look at all other possible causes.

During the visit:

• Take your list of concerns with you – it will provide a useful basis for further discussion and tests
• Talk to your doctor about your concerns honestly and openly, including how long you have been experiencing these problems
• Bring a list of the medications that you are taking including the doses (or bring all your tablets in a bag). Don’t forget inhalers, creams, herbal medications and vitamins.

Remember you can:

• Ask for a longer appointment
• Take a relative, carer or friend with you
• Ask questions and request further explanations if you don’t understand
• Take notes during the visit
• Discuss the option of further assessment by a specialist

The earlier you act the better

The symptoms you have may not be caused by dementia, but if they are, an earlier diagnosis will be helpful.

An early diagnosis means that you can have access to support, information and medication. It is important for people with a diagnosis of dementia to plan ahead and consider factors such as future lifestyle, care, health and finances.

What is dementia?

Dementia is a general term to describe problems with progressive changes in memory and thinking. Alzheimer’s disease is the most common type of dementia. Dementia can happen to anybody, but it becomes more common over the age of 65, and especially over the age of 85. Early signs may not be obvious – only a doctor or specialist can properly diagnose dementia.
